Response for England's Failed Conquistadors

This essay will discuss the differences/similarities between the mentality of the Spaniards and the English in regards to the new world in the times of the 15-16 century. First off the Spaniards had a great head start over the English, in the eyes of the English colonization, it was absolutely necessary to counter the Spanish. There was an English initiative to promote religious growth, to rid the country of beggars and idlers, to increase trade and wealth, to strengthen the Navy, and to promote honor. The Spanish on the contrary only really cared about wealth, their greed, to such a point that the natives were heavily enslaved, and went through many human rights violations/horrific acts, and made them work to death. Both countries viewed Native Americans as inferior and valued wealth over them. They differ in that England thought colonization would help settle the land, rather than the Spaniards who were more concerned with quick riches.
