

It is essential to communicate effectively across cultures because misunderstandings and miscommunications can occur as a result of differing coding rules and cultural norms, which can create barriers between individuals. As an example of this, in the event that you encounter a culture that has little in common with your own, you may experience culture shock, and may feel emotions such as confusion, anxiety, stress. Identifying what hinders effective communication is the first step towards bridging cultural differences in what keeps people from connecting with those from other cultures? Being aware of intercultural communication and avoiding it is the best way to combat it./ It is essential to communicate effectively across cultures because misunderstandings and miscommunications can occur as a result of differing coding rules and cultural norms, which can create barriers between individuals. As an example of this, in the event that you encounter a culture that has little in common with your own, you may experience culture shock, and may feel emotions such as confusion, anxiety, stress. Identifying what hinders effective communication is the first step towards bridging cultural differences in what keeps people from connecting with those from other cultures? Being aware of intercultural communication and avoiding it is the best way to combat it./Generally speaking, a stereotype is a generalized perception about a particular group of individuals. While prejudice is a feeling towards a person based on their biases towards a group. There might be a misconception that the person on the right is a poor jobless individual aka prejudiced, however, he is actually an undercover millionaire. According to stereotyping, the person on the left may appear to be poor due to their skin color, yet he is in fact an undercover millionaire as well. As a matter of fact, prejudice refers to beliefs based on a group, such as gender, employment, and appearance, while stereotype refers to assumptions based on race. As a result of stereotyping and prejudice, communication can be more difficult and closed off. It is important for us to discuss our own ideas and actions in order to avoid this situation./Assuming that all people who belong to another social group or class are worlds apart from you is incorrect. In general, it is erroneous to assume that others act and think the same way that you do. There is a tendency for people to assume others value the same things as themselves, maintaining a self-focused perspective rather than an other-oriented one. Assuming that someone is different from you can be just as detrimental to communication as believing that others are similar to you can be. While we may have differences in culture, we are all members of the human race. It is not necessary to abandon your own ethnic or cultural traditions in order to develop a relationship with someone who is different from you. In regard to death, pain, etiquette, and empathy, most people hold similar beliefs; however, when it comes to fairness, loyalty, and deferring to authority, most people hold different beliefs. Finally, the lesson here is to not assume that everyone thinks the same as you and that they think differently from you.