Response for Manifest Destiny

The purpose of this discussion is to discuss the arguments against slavery and the courage of his approach to exposing the flaws in the slavery system from "A House Divided" and the Freeport Debate". First off in the "House Divided" he stated the fact that stability of a half slavery, half free system is unstable, half of the states believe that slavery is a human right violation and should be completely eradicated, while the other side completely relies on the economy, saying it is a necessary evil and that remove it would be catastrophic to the United States. Pretty much every decision is all centered around pro or con slavery, it has been questioned whether congress or the constitution have the power to free a slave, or whether a slave going to a free state with his master is allowed. All of this makes conflict into thin ice, if the free side has too much power then the slave side will have no choice as to go to war. Considering this Lincoln has a lot of courage pushing back on slavery even if it might lead to the destruction of the United States. In the "Freeport Debate" Lincoln continues to push back against slavery, even finding a contradiction in the enforcement of having half of every state being a slave state to balance the power in the government. Saying that the supreme court does not have the power to force a state to adopt slavery before a territory becomes a state. The supreme court could not meddle with local laws, it is ultimately up to the local government to decide. This was especially important as the talks of Kansas being a slave or free state, dictating the future of slavery itself in America.
