Response for Kentucky 1861: Game Session 3

This discussion talked about the “John Crittenden's Amendments Proposed to Congress”, and why these proposed amendments are not useful to bring up and why it did not solve anything. To start off, the issue of slavery is the most important issue from that time. Every politician and person from both sides has seen all the facts, seen all the perspectives for and against slavery and has already formed a stance on the issue. I think the whole argument is a waste of time because it is just presenting the same old info, in just a fancy new skin. The problem is not the info itself but the values that result from having a personal belief of it. Throwing new information or advancing the spread of slavery will not change anyone’s minds about the topic. The best case scenario is to deescalate the situation or make a statement. John Crittenden's Amendments do just this, advance the stance of slavery which no one in the north would ever accept.
