

Nickolas Diaz

Dr. Patrick Luck

AMH 2010.01

March, 25 2026

Response for Kentucky 1861: Game Session 1

This discussion will look into the perspective of the striving manufacturer in the game session, how they will react to the Manumission Act of 1860 and Militia Act of 1860. To start off the striving manufacturer is in a unique situation, where peace with both sides against a secession and protecting the factory. The Militia Act of 1860 will be less ideal for the character, as it is a direct response to the growing aggressions between the two sides. He will view it as the south being overly protective of themselves, which could result in war. In addition it could have the potential to drag himself to a war that he does not want in the first place. For the manumission act of 1860, banning all free blacks from residing in the state of Kentucky would be the five black workers that he employees would leave, this would be a bad blow as black workers were often paid less, further driving costs. This would also go against his goal of recruiting for more immigrants as the south would be less populated. It would also drive even more aggression as it would be too much of a pushback against one side.