

Nickolas Diaz

Dr. Patrick Luck

AMH 2010.01

April, 1 2026

Response for Kentucky 1861: Game Session 4

This discussion will talk about both sides' views on secession, and how they use it to weaponise or defend from their stance on slavery, from the text of “Jefferson Davis's Inaugural Address” and “Abraham Lincoln's First Inaugural Address”. To start off, Jefferson David framed secession in his speech as a right they had, in order to peacefully and lawfully protest against the north, saying it is the same way how America fought against the British and won their independence. If the north did something that the south deemed unacceptable then they can succeed and become their own country. It is more of a defensive measure to protect the slave industry. For the north secession is felt as a threat, the north does not want a secession, even more than to remove slavery from the south. They viewed secession as a threat, and believed that there was no right for any state to succeed. In Lincoln's inauguration, he banned secession, making it illegal, but promised to not interfere with slavery.