Response for Kentucky 1861: Game Session 2

This discussion will talk about the potential flaws of the democratic structure of the United States, from John C. Calhoun, A Disquisition on Government. To start off, John separates the country by people who receive more benefit than they give from taxes, tax-consumers versus people who pay more than they receive, tax-payers. Saying that tax-payers are being exploited by the tax-consumers. For example, if the tax-payers are a minority like farmers on an issue, everyone else is a tax-consumer, the problem lies in that everyone has equal power on that issue. Essentially giving a disadvantage on the farmers, in something that they should have one hundred percent of the say in anyways. The problem is that votes are not in the amount of contributions to the government but dispersed equally, resulting in positions where the wrong interest occurs.
