Response for Manifest Destiny

This discussion will talk about how the Cherokee Petition failed despite a huge effort to adhere to American's norms in "Cherokee Petition Protesting Removal", and how the Manifest Destiny played a part in the abuse of the Cherokee tribe in "John O'Sullivan Declares America's Manifest Destiny". First off the Cherokee saw that other tribes used violence to protect their lands, however since America is very powerful it ended poorly, so they resorted to non-violent ways. They used tactics like lawsuits and petitions, even going to Congress, and they gave the status of sovereign nation to the tribe, which means that the United States will respect their boundaries but they will not interfere with any other nation. But later they revoked the treaty saying that the tribe will have to be removed from their lands as on 30th March, 1802. Despite having the same clothes, speech, religion and economy as Americans in addition to having a similar constitution, they were not treated the same as Americans, they were completely removed from their lands. A big reason why they were kicked out of their lands was due to the Manifest Destiny which stated that God themselves had a plan to give all the land between the east coast to the west coast. They already started off with gaining Texas, the Louisiana purchase and later California. The very idea that it is God's plan for us to rapidly conquer, is a dangerous idea. It allows a country to question less about its moral compass. Simply believing God gave the land to Americans will prevent the nation from thinking about the people who were conquered.
